

as MyLife and Spokeo to stop posting her address, to no avail. The California Consumer Privacy Act, a statute approved last year and scheduled to become law in January 2020, could help victims like her. But even this groundbreaking legislation may not force the sites to delete personal data. The law's impact is apparently limited by the First Amendment and open-records statutes, the San Francisco Public Press reports.

Photo by Taskin Ashiq on Unsplash

into Sinclair Inlet near Bremerton, Washington. Now environmental groups, the Suquamish Tribe and the state of Washington seek to hold the Navy responsible for what they say is an "egregious violation" of water quality laws that could harm wild salmon. Cascadia Magazine investigates.

Photo: The USS Kitty Hawk, by Nia Martin

The Impact of the Fracking Boom in Ohio: Who's Listening

Julie Grant, with The Allegheny Front, a Pittsburgh-based public media news outlet, examined how Ohio agencies react when residents, landowners, and activists raise concerns about the oil and gas industry in their communities. Grant produced Who's Listening, a 4-part public radio and online package for stations in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

Story 1:

Some Ohio Citizens Who Complained About Oil and Gas Feel "Abandoned" by the State

Story 2:

Ohio Law Favors Energy Development Over Private Property Rights

Story 3:

Citizens Stepped in to Protect Water When Ohio Lawmakers Did Not

Story 4:

Health Problems Abound Near Oil and Gas Wells in Ohio

Help Us Reach Our Goal

DONATE: The Ethics and Excellence in Journalism Foundation has provided $75,000 to support domestic investigations in 2019. This amount includes $25,000 to be awarded if FIJ raises an additional $25,000 in new funding before December 31. Help us reach that matching goal.

News Around Town About FIJ

The Denver Post's David Migoya validates efforts by FIJ to fund investigative journalism

In an interview with the The MFJS Reporter (Spring 2019), David Migoya of the Denver Post, lauded FIJ's efforts to promote investigative journalism.

529 14th Street NW, 13th Floor,
Washington, DC 20045

FOLLOW US

